Gen. John Newton, chief of engineers, in his annual report to the Secretary of War, invites the question of the defensive system of the country has been referred by Congress to the fortifications board, Gen. Newton in his report restricts his estimates to what is required for the repair and modification of existing works, and for torpedoes for harbor defense, having given the subject of our defenseless condition. ort. He presumes that the report of the fortifications board will present the subject of forti-fications in its proper light to Congress, and earnestly hopes that the commencement of an aborate system of defense may no longer be delayed for lack of appropriations. The limited amount of funds available during the past year has been mainly applied to placing in serviceable condition the platforms of heavy guns and mortars bearing upon the channels of enrance to the various harbors.

RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS. The report sets forth the condition of the im-provements of rivers and harbors, the extent of of a dispute between Mr. Hill and the work performed during the year, the his neighbor over a boundary line. The lieutenin respect to the commercial value of the in tration of the works. The examinations and surveys required by the river and harbor act of July 5th, 1884, have been completed, and reports of their results transmitted to Congress rom time to time. \ statement is given of the work accomplished during the year in remov-

After somewhat extended discussion as to the scope of the present hearing, Secretary Lamar said that he had no power over the Patent office, and the question at issue, in his opinion, was simply whether he should advise the Attorney General to bring suit to cancel the Bell patent or set it aside. He thereupon postponed the hearing of the arguments on this point until November 9th, and the further hearing was then adjourned.

Assistant Secretary Coon's Successor. Hon. William E. Smith, of New York, who has been appointed to succeed Mr. Coon as assistant Secretary of the Treasury, is a lawyer about forty years of age. He has been a leader of what is known as the young democracy in the state of New York, and has been identified with the Tilden element of the party. In 1884 he was the leader of his party in the New York assembly and was one of the most influential champions of Gov. Cleveland's reform measures. He was a prominent figure in the delegation of young democrats which went to the Chicago convention to urge the nomination of Cleveland, and on his return was selected to manage the canvass in New York state.

THE ACCEPTANCE OF MR. COON'S RESIGNATION.

The Secretary of the Treasury accepted Secretary Coon's resignation to-day: His letter says simply:

they were true or false. I asked but few questions, but I understood that I was to get this information in the interest of the authorities.
It was when there was considerable fear that the want of harmony between the President and some of the cabinet would result seriously. The office-seekers had their last chance at the President yesterday and made the most of it. A large crowd hung about the White House from ten o'clock until two. Many of them and some of the cabinet would result seriously, but I did not stop to inquire whether I was to work in the interest of the President or otherhave been in Washington since the 4th of March expecting appointments, and have been reduced to the last degree of "You went at once, I suppose?" said the scribe.

A large number of office-seekers have called at the see now that three were sent into Maryland, but two of them got barely over the line. I naturally thought that the people had heard of these two officers and would be a little suspiover and over again. Each time they have been told that it was out of Mr. Cleveland's power to do any thing for them. and they have power to do any thing for them, and they have been directed to go to the heads of the departments in which they want appointments. They would go away, but the next day would return and say: "Mr. President, I took your advice and saw Secretary —. He promised to give the case his consideration. It's all right. I thought I would come and tell you, as you took so much interest in my case."
